Summary

Ricardo Arglebe is the Finance Director of Siemens S.p.A. in Italy.

Professional experience

Ricardo Arglebe began his career at Siemens in Portugal in 1988, embarking on a continuous growth path within the Group, characterized by roles of increasing responsibility and a strong international dimension. Over the years, he has developed solid and diversified experience across different geographical and industrial contexts, contributing to the formation of a broad and integrated view of the business.

After an initial phase primarily focused on business activities in Portugal and Germany, he continued his international career in Latin America, taking on the role of CFO of Siemens Brazil. This was a key experience that strengthened his ability to operate in complex markets and to support the growth of large and multifaceted organizations.

He subsequently served as CFO of a Global Business Unit in Germany, where he further consolidated strategic and financial capabilities in a highly competitive and strategically relevant environment.

In January 2017, he moved to Italy, assuming the role of CFO of Siemens S.p.A., bringing to the company a wealth of expertise developed at a global level. In recent years, in addition to his responsibilities as Country CFO, he has also taken on roles closer to the business, enabling him to contribute more directly to its development with a focus on long-term value creation.

Firmly believing that finance is ultimately about people, trust, and the quality of decisions, Ricardo orients his work toward creating financial clarity and stability. His objective is to support organizations in making informed decisions, investing with confidence, and generating sustainable long-term value.

At Siemens today, he operates at the intersection of financial rigor, industrial vision, and responsibility, supporting business transformation, innovation, and people development in an economic and geopolitical environment that is continuously evolving.
