

> Siemens adds UniWatt to local sales network

Dec 11, 2014

Siemens Australia has expanded its local sales network with the appointment of UniWatt as a distributor for its range of low voltage and industrial switchgear products.

"It's very exciting to have UniWatt on board as a local distributor of our products," said Siemens Australia Energy Management, Executive General Manager, Andrew Theodore.

"We were looking for a company that knew our product portfolio intimately and could offer the best solution for customers.

"This expansion will result in better reach, offering greater competition to help our growing customer base," Mr Theodore said.

UniWatt National Sales Manager Scott McCarthy welcomed the partnership, which will see the company distribute Siemens low and medium voltage flexible cables, data cables, industrial cables and low voltage distribution and control products.

"We are very proud to be distributing some of the best technology available to Australian customers and help provide them with value and innovation.

"For more than 150 years Siemens has been synonymous with quality German engineering and we look forward to being a part of such a renowned organisation," Mr McCarthy said.
